Summary:

Cellular translation is the process by which the genetic information contained in messenger RNA (mRNA) is used to synthesize a specific protein. Translation occurs in the ribosomes of the cell, which are composed of ribosomal RNA (rRNA) and proteins. Translation begins when the ribosome reads the mRNA and synthesizes a polypeptide chain according to the genetic code, which is a set of rules that specify the sequence of amino acids in a protein. Transfer RNA (tRNA) molecules bring the correct amino acids to the ribosome and place them in the correct order based on the base pairing between mRNA and tRNA. The final protein product is then folded into its functional three-dimensional structure.

Ephesians: An Introduction and Study Guide Stephen E. Fowl, 2017-01-12 In this guide Stephen E Fowl introduces students to both theological fruit and critical issues of the letter to the Ephesians On the theological front Fowl shows how Ephesians offers an unparalleled cosmic vision of the significance of the death and resurrection of Jesus of the role of heavenly powers in the universe and of how the community of Christians is to engage with those powers Fowl also opens up the major identity questions Ephesians shows existed for early Christians how to conceive the relationship of Gentiles with the Jews from among whom their faith emerged and how to live as a Christian within households ordered on patriarchal lines while not capitulating to patriarchy On the critical front Fowl provides an introduction to the key critical questions and issues such as whether this letter was actually written to a church in Ephesus and whether Paul the apostle was indeed the author of the letter Yet whilst there are demanding linguistic historical and cultural questions to be answered Fowl is careful to point out that this should not be done at the expense of reading the text closely and appreciating its meaning and message
