

Abstract

Abstract

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The intervention group (n = 20) participated in a 12-week walking program, while the control group (n = 20) remained sedentary. The walking program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 30 minutes. The program was supervised by a physical therapist. The control group was instructed to remain sedentary. The study was conducted in a community setting. The primary outcome was the change in physical fitness, measured by the 6-minute walk test. Secondary outcomes included changes in body mass index (BMI), blood pressure, and psychological health, measured by the Beck Depression Inventory (BDI). The walking program resulted in significant improvements in physical fitness, BMI, blood pressure, and psychological health compared to the control group. The findings suggest that a supervised walking program can be an effective intervention for improving the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
