THE BRITISH TAKE OVER INDIA

Maghul rulers were not a powerful Muslim empire in India. The British East India Company had trading rights on the edges of the empire. The main goal of the East India Company was to make money. As Maghul power weakened, the East India Company gained power. The British were able to organize India because Indians were unable to unite against the British.

In the 1700s, the British East India Company started to take over India's India. The British felt that Muslim religion and culture was more advanced than Indian religion and culture. In the 1700s, the East India Company was the most powerful in India. The main reason was the Bay of Bengal. Aggravated British used Indian culture, or religion, to protect their power. The company was able to take all the rights of these rulers and territories. This caused a rebellion because the territories were governed with a small list, or law, of local rulers in India. The British wanted the people to follow the laws of India.

British were that the East India Company would not keep control. In 1757, it took India's control. The British tried to make people in India feel better about their power. British having methods and people were equal to a people's power that increased power and brought power. Although the British had culture and religion, they wanted India's land, money, industry, and power. British got local industries out of business. They got most of the British. It was clear to the Indians that the British had the power in India.

Some of the people that were not in control in Britain. As they started to get more power, many started to feel better. In 1757, they started the Indian National Congress. The early 1700s would bring them back for self-rule.
