Multi-state longitudinal research is generally very expensive. Sometimes research can be done in a laboratory setting and sometimes it can be done in the community or field and the expense can sometimes increase because just the general design, including the collection of the particular information, requires either the involvement of the local or population or the specific situation and the design may have many changes. Often we cannot use subjects in living in the field, rather laboratory and when doing general data, often the number are huge. The researchers have the following limitations:

Students will often be concerned about their writing and will not read carefully into the first step of each process. They identify what is wrong and sometimes, surprisingly, will focus more on the mechanics than on the content. Most students just expect to be told that they are wrong. Following feedback, some students will sometimes not pay attention, just think you said it wrong because they didn't pay attention.
