Abstract This paper presents a novel approach to the problem of finding a good representation of a set of data. The approach is based on the idea of using a set of basis functions to represent the data. The basis functions are chosen such that they are linearly independent and span the space of the data. The data is then represented as a linear combination of these basis functions. The coefficients of the linear combination are found by solving a system of linear equations. The resulting representation is then used to find a good approximation of the data. The approach is shown to be effective for a wide range of data sets.
