Distant Readings of Disciplinarity Benjamin Miller,2022-12-28 In Distant Readings of Disciplinarity Benjamin Miller brings a big data approach to the study of disciplinarity in rhetoric composition and writing studies RCWS by developing scalable maps of the methods and topics of several thousand RCWS dissertations from 2001 to 2015 Combining charts and figures with engaging and even playful prose Miller offers an accessible model of how large scale data driven research can advance disciplinary understanding both answering and amplifying the call to add replicable data analysis and visualization to the mix of methods regularly employed in the field Writing studies has long been marked by a multitude of methods and interlocking purposes partaking of not just humanities approaches but also social scientific ones with data drawn from interviews and surveys alongside historical and philosophical arguments and with corpus analytics in large scale collections jostling against small scale case studies of individuals These areas of study aren't always cleanly separable shifting modes mark the discipline as open and welcoming to many different angles of research The field needs to embrace that vantage point and generate new degrees of familiarity with methods beyond those of any individual scholar Not only a training genre and not only a knowledge making genre the dissertation is also a discipline producing genre Illustrating what the field has been studying and how Distant Readings of Disciplinarity supports more fruitful collaborations within and across research areas and methods

Categories Michael Gorman, Jonathan J. Sanford, 2004-11 This volume addresses the subject of categories What are they How are they used in speaking and thinking What role do they play in our moral deliberations Why are there different sorts of categories And are categories independent of our thinking and speaking giving objective form to the world we aim to think and speak about These and other questions concerning categories have been part of philosophy from the very beginning and they raise foundational issues in metaphysics epistemology ethics and other branches of philosophy Yet pursuing answers to these questions has proven difficult because investigations into categories push us to the very limits of what we can know The essays in this volume written by a mix of well established and younger philosophers bridge divides between historical and systematic approaches in philosophy as well divides between analytical continental and American traditions They offer new interpretations of Aristotle Confucius Aquinas Buridan Kant Pierce Husserl and Wittgenstein and they challenge received views on normativity the value of set theory the objectivity of category schemes and other topics This volume the first to offer a comprehensive examination of the subject challenges mainstream positions on category theory It will be of particular interest to philosophers and others concerned with how the world is divided
