

Introduction
 The purpose of this study is to investigate the effects of a new educational program on student performance. The program is designed to enhance critical thinking and problem-solving skills through a series of interactive modules. The study will involve a group of students who will participate in the program and a control group that will not. Data will be collected at the beginning and end of the program to measure changes in performance. The results of the study will be used to inform future educational practices and to determine the effectiveness of the program.

Methodology
 The study will use a quasi-experimental design. The participants will be divided into two groups: the experimental group, which will receive the new educational program, and the control group, which will receive the standard curriculum. The program consists of several modules that focus on critical thinking and problem-solving. The control group will follow the standard curriculum, which does not include these modules. Data will be collected at the beginning and end of the program to measure changes in performance. The results of the study will be used to inform future educational practices and to determine the effectiveness of the program.

Results and Discussion
 The results of the study show that the experimental group, which received the new educational program, performed significantly better than the control group, which received the standard curriculum. The improvement was most pronounced in the areas of critical thinking and problem-solving. The discussion of the results suggests that the new program is effective in enhancing these skills. The study also highlights the importance of critical thinking and problem-solving in education. The results of the study will be used to inform future educational practices and to determine the effectiveness of the program.

Conclusion
 The study concludes that the new educational program is effective in enhancing critical thinking and problem-solving skills. The results of the study will be used to inform future educational practices and to determine the effectiveness of the program.
