

Biology Unit 4 – 3.4.1

Definitions

Word	Definition
Ecosystem	An ecosystem is made up of all the interacting biotic (living) and abiotic (non-living) factors in a specific area
Population	Is a group of interbreeding organisms of one species in a habitat
Community	All the populations of different organisms in a given area at a given time
Habitat	Place where a community of organisms lives (e.g. decaying log)
Ecological Niche	How an organism fits into the environment, refers to both where an organism lives and what it does there. No two species occupy the same niche

Investigating populations

Quadrats

3 factors to consider:

1. The size of quadrat to use – this will depend on the size of whatever you're sampling and how they are distributed within the sample area
2. The number of quadrats to record within the sample area – for questions asking about this 10 or more should be used within each area to get a big enough sample size, basically more is better
3. The position of each quadrat within the sample area – random sampling should be used

Random sampling

- This is used to prevent bias – as someone might pick to place a quadrat where there is a large amount of clover for example but this may not be representative.

You should:

- Place two tape measures at right angles along two sides of the area you're studying
- Obtain co-ordinates using a random numbers table
- Place quadrats at the intersection of each pair of co-ordinates

Systematic sampling using transects

- Transect is a line or tape
- This can be used more effectively than quadrats for measuring things such as abundance of species as you enter a forest or measuring the abundance of species compared with how far away from the sea you are
