A Handy Volume on the Work of the Dairy Farm John Prince Sheldon, 1896 DATA SCIENCE WORKSHOP: Liver Disease Classification and Prediction Using Machine Learning and Deep Learning with Python GUI Vivian Siahaan, 2023-08-09 In this project Data Science Workshop focused on Liver Disease Classification and Prediction we embarked on a comprehensive journey through various stages of data analysis model development and performance evaluation The workshop aimed to utilize Python and its associated libraries to create a Graphical User Interface GUI that facilitates the classification and prediction of liver disease cases Our exploration began with a thorough examination of the dataset This entailed importing necessary libraries such as NumPy Pandas and Matplotlib for data manipulation visualization and preprocessing The dataset representing liver related attributes was read and its dimensions were checked to ensure data integrity To gain a preliminary understanding the dataset's initial rows and column information were displayed We identified key features such as Age Gender and various biochemical attributes relevant to liver health The dataset's structure including data types and non null counts was inspected to identify any potential data quality issues We detected that the Albumin_and_Globulin_Ratio feature had a few missing values which were subsequently filled with the median value Our exploration extended to visualizing categorical distributions Pie charts provided insights into the proportions of healthy and unhealthy liver cases among different gender categories Stacked bar plots further delved into the connections between Total_Bilirubin categories and the prevalence of liver disease fostering a deeper understanding of these relationships Transitioning to predictive modeling we embarked on constructing machine learning models Our arsenal included a range of algorithms such as Logistic Regression Support Vector Machines K Nearest Neighbors Decision Trees Random Forests Gradient Boosting Extreme Gradient

Boosting Light Gradient Boosting The data was split into training and testing sets and each model underwent rigorous evaluation using metrics like accuracy precision recall F1 score and ROC AUC Hyperparameter tuning played a pivotal role in model enhancement We leveraged grid search and cross validation techniques to identify the best combination of hyperparameters optimizing model performance Our focus shifted towards assessing the significance of each feature using techniques such as feature importance from tree based models The workshop didn't halt at machine learning it delved into deep learning as well We implemented an Artificial Neural Network ANN using the Keras library This powerful model demonstrated its ability to capture complex relationships within the data With distinct layers activation functions and dropout layers to prevent overfitting the ANN achieved impressive results in liver disease prediction Our journey culminated with a comprehensive analysis of model performance The metrics chosen for evaluation included accuracy precision recall F1 score and confusion matrix visualizations These metrics provided a comprehensive view of the model's capability to correctly classify both healthy and unhealthy liver cases In summary the Data Science Workshop on Liver Disease Classification and Prediction was a holistic exploration into data preprocessing feature categorization machine learning and deep learning techniques The culmination of these efforts resulted in the creation of a Python GUI that empowers users to input patient attributes and receive predictions regarding liver health Through this workshop participants gained a well rounded understanding of data science techniques and their application in the field of healthcare Readers' Guide, 1915
