PM handballs treaty pledge

Anthony Albanese has promised that a gradual dismantling of treaty arrangements will be a government priority, but a federal spokesman says the government will not "take the treaty off the table".

The government's position on the treaty was made clear in a letter to the Prime Minister, which said the government would "continue to work on the treaty" and "will not take the treaty off the table".

The letter also said the government would "continue to work on the treaty" and "will not take the treaty off the table".

ANTHONY ALBANESE

The government is refusing to provide a time-frame for when it intends to establish the treaty, which is a key part of the process to close the gap.

Albanese, however, is willing to engage in a dialogue with the Prime Minister to establish the treaty, which is a key part of the process to close the gap.
