Abstract: How much is enough? In general, the more the better. But when it comes to the amount of information that we need to make a decision, the answer is not so simple. Too much information can be overwhelming and lead to poor decisions. This paper explores the concept of "information overload" and its impact on decision-making. It discusses the factors that contribute to information overload, such as the volume of information, the complexity of the information, and the time pressure. The paper also examines the consequences of information overload, including increased stress, decreased productivity, and poor decision-making. Finally, the paper offers some strategies for managing information overload, such as prioritizing information, using filters, and taking breaks.
