learning and thinking styles are not abilities but rather preferences in the use of abilities. Traditionally many psychologists and educators have believed that people's successes and failures are attributable mainly to individual differences in abilities. However, for the past few decades, research on the roles of thinking, learning, and cognitive styles in performance within both academic and nonacademic settings has indicated that they account for individual differences in performance that go well beyond abilities. New theories better differentiate styles from abilities and make more contact with other psychological literatures. Recent research in many cases is more careful and conclusive than are some of the older studies. Cognitive learning and thinking styles are of interest to educators because they predict academic performance in ways that go beyond abilities and because taking styles into account can help teachers to improve both instruction and assessment and to show sensitivity to cultural and individual diversity among learners. They are also of interest in business where instruments to assess styles are valuable in selecting and placing personnel. The state of the art research and theory in this volume will be of particular interest to scholars and graduate students in cognitive and educational psychology, managers and others concerned with intellectual styles as applied in educational, industrial, and corporate settings.

Psychology: First Canadian Edition Study Guide Richard O. The Study Guide also includes three self-tests, one of which encourages students to think critically about the chapter's concepts, answers with page references for the self-tests and explanations of why a choice is correct or incorrect, and a Focus on Language and Vocabulary section which explains idioms and other phrases used by David Myers in the text that may not be clear to some readers.

The Value of Intellectual Styles Li-fang Zhang, 2017-09-21 Intellectual styles are individuals' preferred ways of using their abilities. This book provides the first comprehensive and systematic review of existing research on the value and desirability of different intellectual styles. By critically analyzing findings from hundreds of international studies undertaken over eight decades, Li-fang Zhang demonstrates that the creativity-generating Type I styles are generally superior to the norm-conforming Type II styles in relation to a wide range of learning processes and developmental outcomes, work performance, physical and mental health, and many other domains of people's lives. She further demonstrates that people explicitly and implicitly express their preference for Type I styles over Type II styles. Professor Zhang elucidates the practical value of cultivating diverse intellectual styles, especially Type I styles, in both academic and nonacademic settings and lays the groundwork for future research to advance the field of intellectual styles and to inform scholarly work in other academic disciplines.
