The Boarding School Bison Drive Site:

Survival by Hunting George Frison, 2004-08-11 The North American Great Plains and Rocky Mountains have yielded many artifacts and other clues about the prehistoric people who once lived there but little is understood about the hunting practices that ensured their survival for thousands of years. Noted archaeologist George Frison brings a lifetime of experience as a hunter rancher and guide to bear on excavation data from the region relating to hunting illuminating prehistoric hunting practices in entirely new ways. Sharing his intimate knowledge of animal habitats and behavior and his familiarity with hunting strategies and techniques Frison argues that this kind of firsthand knowledge is crucial for understanding hunting in the past. Hunters of the Recent Past Leslie B. Davis, Brian O.K. Reeves, 2014-10-30 One of a series of more than 20 volumes resulting from the World Archaeological Congress September 1986 which brought together archaeologists and anthropologists from many parts of the world academics from contingent disciplines and non academics from a wide range of cultural backgrounds. This book considers prehistoric and more recent manifestations of human hunting behaviour with a general emphasis on communal hunting. It demonstrates that the combination of archaeological ethnographic and ethnohistorical approaches provides a researched basis for consideration of the topic on worldwide regional and local scales. It includes theoretical and methodological issues within a context of enquiry original data presentation and discussion. It is of interest to archaeologists anthropologists and ethnohistorians.

Hunting and Extinctions in Southwest Asia and North America The Silent Testimony of Communal Game Traps explores communal game traps for harvesting ungulate herds in two continents utilizing a comparative approach addressing settings species and the hunters societies. The kites of Southwest Asia have been known to archaeologists for almost one hundred years but with the advent of high resolution satellite images thousands of sites have been found. Using the rich data from the Southwest and Central Asia and North America this book addresses some of the important questions that arise concerning the social economic and environmental implications of ancient and recent use of large game traps. This book has four major parts. The first introduces the book and reviews the evolution of human hunting. The second part presents examples of desert kites from various areas of Southwest and Central Asia. Detailed case studies are included that use a variety of evidence such as aerial surveys field surveys excavations eye witnesses accounts and petroglyph depictions. Environmental and geographical settings of the isolated traps the clusters of traps and the long chains are explored to provide conceptual models regarding past herd behavior and their seasonal migrations. The third part presents examples of communal game traps in various regions in North America addressing the same issues discussed in the second part The fourth part provides a comparative study of game traps in North America with the kites of Southwest Asia focusing on the settings species and social organization of the hunters With the research on communal game traps increasing rapidly this book provides the first inclusive synthesis on the subject and is for archaeologists anthropologists zoologists ecologists and environmentalists who are interested in past interactions between humans and their environments and the impact of past human communities on the landscape and on target game populations as well as the consequences that are still relevant today The Seedskadee Project Dwight L.
