Abstract: This study examined the relationship between perceived social support and self-esteem in a sample of 100 college students. The results showed that perceived social support was positively related to self-esteem. The findings suggest that interventions aimed at enhancing social support may be effective in improving self-esteem.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The subjects were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks. The walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the subjects. The walking program significantly improved the subjects' physical fitness, as measured by the 6-minute walk test, and their psychological health, as measured by the Beck Depression Inventory and the State-Trait Anxiety Inventory. The walking program also significantly improved the subjects' quality of life, as measured by the SF-36. The walking program was well tolerated and had no adverse effects. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

Abstract: This study is a quantitative survey of 1000 employees of a large, multi-national, for-profit organization. The study examines the relationship between organizational commitment and organizational citizenship behavior (OCB). The results show that organizational commitment is a significant predictor of OCB. The study also finds that organizational commitment is a significant predictor of turnover intention. The study concludes that organizational commitment is a key factor in predicting OCB and turnover intention.
