

Study Chapter: Blood

Be ready to explain these three blood reactions immediately:

1. Describe both a red blood cell's morphology and understand the underlying reasons of the shape.

2. Explain the difference between a normal erythrocyte and a reticulocyte.

1. Erythrocytes: Morphology: Biconcave disk. This cell shape helps them with their main function: oxygen transport. The biconcave shape increases the surface area for gas exchange while maintaining a small volume. The cell is also flexible, allowing it to squeeze through narrow blood vessels.
2. Leukocytes: A collection of cells that fight infection and are larger than erythrocytes. They have various shapes and functions, including phagocytosis and antibody production.
3. Platelets: Small, disc-shaped cells that help with blood clotting. They are much smaller than erythrocytes and have a granular appearance.
4. Plasma: The liquid component of blood, which carries cells and nutrients. It is a pale yellow color and contains various proteins and electrolytes.

2. Describe what happens physiologically during the formation of a reticulocyte. (What's the process?)

When a red blood cell is damaged or old, it is removed from circulation. The bone marrow produces new red blood cells to replace the lost ones. This process is called erythropoiesis.

3. Describe what happens physiologically during the formation of a reticulocyte. (What's the process?)

1. Erythropoiesis: The process of red blood cell formation. It starts in the bone marrow, where stem cells differentiate into erythroid progenitors. These cells then mature into reticulocytes, which are released into the bloodstream.
2. Reticulocyte: A young red blood cell that has just been released from the bone marrow. It is still developing and has a higher percentage of reticulin (a protein) than a mature erythrocyte.
3. Mature Erythrocyte: A fully developed red blood cell that has lost its nucleus and organelles, leaving space for hemoglobin. It is then ready to transport oxygen throughout the body.

Explain the difference between a normal erythrocyte and a reticulocyte. (What's the difference?)

A normal erythrocyte is a mature red blood cell that has lost its nucleus and organelles, leaving space for hemoglobin. A reticulocyte is a young red blood cell that has just been released from the bone marrow and still contains some reticulin.

3. Explain the difference.

4. Describe the shape and size of a reticulocyte. (What's the difference?)

1. Shape and Size: Reticulocytes are larger than normal erythrocytes and have a more irregular shape. They are typically 10-15 micrometers in diameter, compared to 6-8 micrometers for normal erythrocytes.

5. Explain the difference between a normal erythrocyte and a reticulocyte. (What's the difference?)

1. Shape and Size: Reticulocytes are larger than normal erythrocytes and have a more irregular shape. They are typically 10-15 micrometers in diameter, compared to 6-8 micrometers for normal erythrocytes.
