

Lifespan Development

Study Guide for Exam 1

Developmental Psychology: the discipline that studies the physical, cognitive, social, and emotional development of humans.

Developmental stages:

1. Developmental periods: broadest of life's stages, identifying major physical and psychological systems and structures that develop during infancy, childhood, adolescence, and adulthood, each marked by key developmental milestones.
2. Childhood: the period of growth and development from birth to adolescence, marked by rapid physical growth, cognitive development, and socialization. It is divided into early childhood (birth to age 5), middle childhood (ages 6 to 12), and late childhood (ages 13 to 18).
3. Adolescence: the period of life's early teenage years, marked by physical, cognitive, and social changes. It is divided into early adolescence (ages 13 to 15), middle adolescence (ages 16 to 18), and late adolescence (ages 19 to 21).
4. Adulthood: the period of life's later years, marked by physical, cognitive, and social changes. It is divided into early adulthood (ages 22 to 40), middle adulthood (ages 41 to 60), and late adulthood (ages 61 and older).
5. Developmental tasks: specific goals and challenges that individuals must meet at each stage of life to achieve a sense of well-being and fulfillment.

Developmental research:

1. Longitudinal research: studies that follow the same group of individuals over time, tracking their development from birth to adulthood. This method allows researchers to identify patterns of development and to study the effects of environmental factors on development.
2. Cross-sectional research: studies that compare different age groups of individuals at the same time. This method allows researchers to identify differences in development between age groups and to study the effects of environmental factors on development.
3. Experimental research: studies that manipulate an independent variable and measure its effect on a dependent variable. This method allows researchers to identify causal relationships between variables.
4. Correlational research: studies that measure the relationship between two or more variables. This method allows researchers to identify associations between variables, but it cannot establish causality.
