by
T. VISWANATHAN

Designed for the final year undergraduate or the first year postgraduate students in electronics and communication engineering and allied subjects, this compact and comprehensive text fulfils the long-felt need for a suitable text book in the area of telecommunication switching systems and networks. It covers topics of current interest such as fibre optic communication systems and networks, time division switching systems, data networks, ISDN and voice data integration schemes.

The book begins with a brief discussion on the evolution of telecommunication. It then goes on to give a classification scheme for switching systems, and describes the basic components of a switching system and the fundamental concepts of network structures. Principles of switching are illustrated through an analysis of electromechanical switching systems. Electronic switching and stored program control, digitalization of signals, and in particular speech signals, are also dealt with, followed by an analysis of digital time division switching. It provides an indepth coverage of the newly emerging communication system, viz. fibre optic communication system, and the traffic engineering concepts. A distinguishing feature of the book is the thorough treatment of the most important telecommunication networks, viz. public switched telephone network (PSTN), public data network (PDN), and integrated services digital network (ISDN).

This well-organized text lays emphasis on system-level treatment and practical aspects of telecommunication engineering. Worked out examples, as well as exercises and "Further Reading" given at the end of each chapter would be of considerable assistance to the reader. This comprehensive book, covering all aspects of telecommunication engineering, should prove to be an invaluable asset to both students and professionals.
