

If the gear shift lever is moved into the 'Plus' or 'Minus' position from Manual/Sport, the system will change into Manual mode. The transmission then works with 6 (or more) "gear" ratios. The system will select a gear appropriate to road and driving conditions. To change up a gear, the driver must move the gear lever to the 'Plus' position. To change down, the driver must move the gear lever to the 'Minus' position.

If the CVT software decides that a shift might cause damage to the transmission, such as attempting to shift to 1st gear at 100 km/h, the gear change will be prevented. If the driver does not shift up, the next gear will be automatically selected when the engine revolutions reach approximately 6000 rpm. Equally, if the driver does not shift down when reducing vehicle speed, the system performs the down-change automatically thus ensuring the transmission is in the appropriate gear.

5. Functionality in Park and Neutral

The engine can only be started in Neutral or Park, as with any automatic transmission.

A spring and cone operated pawl mechanically locks the secondary pulley when the selector lever is moved to the Park position. If the lever is set in the Park position when the vehicle has a higher speed, the pawl will rattle without engaging Park. It will not engage until the vehicle speed drops below approximately 5 km/h.

2. Secondary pulley

Fig. 8: Parking lock

6. Normal Operation

The operation of the transmission, during driving, has no comparison with that of a conventional automatic transmission. All kinds of tunings are possible. A possible tuning is that if the accelerator pedal is depressed sharply, the engine rpm will rise considerably more than in relation to the speed of the vehicle. This functionality is normal for a CVT but may surprise drivers not familiar with this type of transmission. Other tunings / variograms are also possible, for example tunings that are closer to that of a conventional automatic transmission.
