Television And Gender Representation:

Television and Gender Representation Barrie Gunter, 1995 On gender stereotyping on television The Television Studies Reader Robert Clyde Allen, Annette Hill, 2004 The Television Studies Reader brings together key writings in the expanding field of television studies providing an overview of the discipline and addressing issues of industry genre audiences production and ownership and representation The Reader charts the ways in which television and television studies are being redefined by new and alternative ways of producing broadcasting and watching TV such as cable satellite and digital broadcasting home video internet broadcasting and interactive TV as well as exploring the recent boom in genres such as reality TV and docusoaps It brings together articles from leading international scholars to provide perspectives on television programmes and practices from around the world acknowledging both television's status as a global medium and the many and varied local contexts of its production and reception Articles are grouped in seven themed sections each with an introduction by the editors Institutions of Television Spaces of Television Modes of Television Making Television Social Representation on Television Watching Television Transforming Television Television Toby Miller, 2003 Working Papers Film & TV Studies - WP 2010/2: Gender Representations in Belgian Children's Programmes, Gender Representation and Occupational Portrayals in Primetime Television Brittany Danielle Smith, 2016 This study examined gender representation and occupational portrayals on primetime television in order to determine if gender role stereotypes are still present throughout programming and what progress if any has been made in comparison to previous studies A content analysis was done on primetime programming airing during the fall of 2013 on ABC CBS NBC Fox and the CW and analyzed gender major and minor character genre occupation and marital status The findings of this study reveal that women are still underrepresented on screen as well as in prestigious occupations especially when compared to their real world representation This study also examined the five broadcast networks individually and found gender representation and occupational portrayal differences between the networks revealing which networks have made progress towards equal and accurate representation and which have not The results of this content analysis suggest that stereotypical representations of men and women are still frequent on primetime television Furthermore these findings were examined in relation to social cognitive theory to determine the potential effect these portrayals could be having on viewers gender role beliefs While some improvements have been made in comparison to previous studies progress still needs to be made among all primetime programming to represent female characters in a wide variety of occupations and roles that are more consistent with reality

Comparison of Gender Stereotypes in German and East Asian Television Advertisements Sarah Heitz, 2015-10-23 Research Paper postgraduate from the year 2004 in the subject Communications Intercultural Communication grade 1 3 University of Augsburg course Academic Writing language English abstract Stereotypes and prejudice are omnipresent and therefore influence every person in his or her perception Undoubtedly most of us are unaware of this fact As a phrase from the Handwörterbuch der Psychologie states The prejudice of our own impartiality is the strongest prejudice of all Asanger Wenninger p 539 Gender stereotype refers to the subjective perception of what a male or female should be or how one should behave For example a stereotypic Hong Kong Chinese person would perceive that females should be gentle sympathetic and shy whereas males should possess strong personality and leadership abilities Fung Ma 2000 Gender roles can change in alignment with changes in society However the Arima 2003 study determined that television advertisements in Japan still depicted the old gender stereotype of men at work and women at home even though the rate of women attending college and of women in the working population has increased Moreover the younger generation in Japan supports the new gender stereotype of men at work women at both work and home In the US television advertisements reflected gender role expectations as well Products that are assumed to appeal to female customers are presented exclusively by a female main character Respectively products predominantly designed for men are exclusively presented by male characters Blain McElroy 2002 Although gender representation has been studied extensively in the US little is known about the portrayal of gender stereotypes in German and Asian television advertisements This study proposes to fill this gap by analysing German television advertisements and by comparing the findings to the results of latest studies on gender stereotypes in East Asia

Gender Representation in Children's Television Karen Duda,2000 This thesis addresses the issue of gender representation and gender roles in children s television The term gender representation in this context refers to the number of female characters compared to the number of male characters present in children s television programming Gender roles refers to the activities female and male characters are performing on these shows and whether or not they fit within stereotypical female and male roles in Western culture Female characters are portrayed as less important than their male counterparts While there has been some change in the range of roles female characters span in recent years females are still quite rarely portrayed in traditionally masculine professions in children s television programming Author s abstract
