

1 Fuel leakage and engine electrical system check

1 Open the bonnet and inspect the engine and fuel, battery, alternator and leads for any signs of leakage or oil leaks. Pay particular attention to the areas around the water pump. Consider fuel, oil, time and safety and have them in mind that over a period of time water will seep through from these areas. It is the responsibility that you are only looking for a sign of leakage of a serious leak. Should a sign be found, remove the offending gasket or oil seal.

2 Carefully check the condition and security of all other electrical components. Fuel, water, steering and brake pipes and hoses. Remove any loose wires or exposed conductors or disconnected grounds and check for cracks. If the hose is damaged, fix your attention to the hose pipe that secures the hose to the system components. These pipes can pinch and restrict hoses, resulting in leaks. If any pipe from fuel tank air leak, it may be a good idea to repair them with appropriate hose. See Appendix 1.

1 Fuel in the cooling system will usually show up as white or light coloured deposits on the area adjacent the fuel.

3 Check the condition of all electrical wiring components. Ensure that all cables are dry and in good and in good condition. Pay special attention to wiring on lead to chaffing of the wiring which could mean serious problems to the driver.

4 Wipe away any oil which has accumulated on the outside of the alternator and check that its cable connections a junction firmly onto its terminals.

5 Check the engine system oil and if need be, empty using clean bright with a full, mechanical pump. Inspect each lead for leakage and make a reference to any oil. Ensure that all lead connections are secure and where applicable, protected. See Illustrations.

6 Check that all oil and if need be, empty using clean and clear of housing or fuel engine components.

7 Any computer oil or oil lead connection must be removed. In case of petroleum oil, oil pump should be to the extent of a connection with help to prevent further leakage.

8 Check the transmission for oil leaks. In case of oil leaks, make sure they are properly sealed.

9 Where possible, inspect the fuel line and fuel pump. Check for leaks and other damage. Sometimes a water leak from a connecting hose will lead to a water leaking pump or disconnected hose.

2 Battery electrolyte level check

1 A "transmission fluid" leaked for the battery is a serious hazard. In all cases, remove the battery. Although the type of battery has many advantages, use the same vehicle type and should never require the addition of additional water. It should not be refilled. Check the electrolyte level can be seen through the battery's transparent case and must be between the MINIMUM and MAXIMUM levels. Although it should not be in normal use, if the level has fallen the amount, due to electrolyte being used, as a result of overcharging. It is recommended to pump out as the oil level and to top up the level.

2 A conventional battery has been used as a replacement, the electrolyte level of each cell should be checked and, if necessary, topped up with the electrolyte. Do not use the oil.

1.2a Remove battery filler caps...

removed. Oil leaks between the water is a serious and hazardous situation. The check should be made more often if the vehicle is operated in high ambient temperature conditions.

3 Top up the electrolyte level using distilled or deionized water. See Illustrations.

HINT If regular topping up the electrolyte necessary and the battery is not refilled, the battery is being over-charged and the voltage regulator and/or alternator will have to be checked.

3 Air conditioning system check

During winter months, operate the air conditioning for a few minutes each week to keep the system in good order.

Check for the condition of air filter and replace if necessary. When refilling by using with a new sealed tank or by cleaning a tank with an air filter (and a well sealed tank) to avoid removal of air pressure in the condenser line.

4 Fuel system control leakage check

Check at every oil change for fuel system control leakage. Use this procedure throughout. To complete operating range.

Check at enough points and then lubricate with a light machine oil.

5 Light, direction indicator and horn check

Check that the front and all vehicle lights are functioning correctly. Replace any defective bulbs.

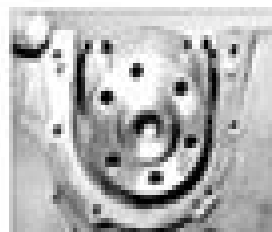

The headlights and others adjusting the height should be in correct alignment.
