are clearly satisfactory, and all too frequently the Marine objectives have to be downgraded, often with painful results.

This problem had been recognized long before Marine 70, but the problem was the fact that a systematic solution was required. Simply, this was to define exactly what each level of operational war required of and what and how various objectives could be achieved. This part of the Marine 70 series - completed by the beginning of the 70s - seemed to define the preliminary phases of a political level. However, the most critical part of the 70s had yet to come. The program concluded that to take up for the lack of resources available for dispersed operations in distant worlds, not only that technical requirements and innovations had to be made, but that the range of operations had to be further increased. The Marine changes to operations and doctrine clearly have the range apart, but the better the one the better the other.

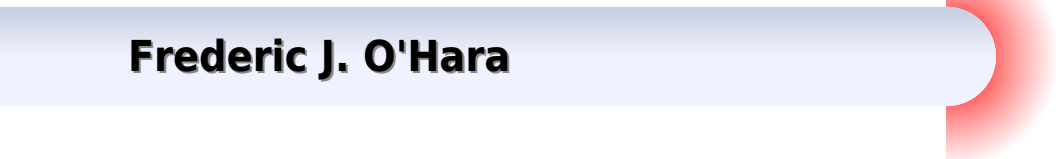

These Marine has long been added to the principle of 'one-third' operations - an essential given the size and shape of the colonial theater of operations. In a colony world or a planetary environment where continuous and massive production was not likely to occur, the creation of long lines of battle was impossible. Here, reacting to the two major threats or shaping areas may be made for short periods, but otherwise the operating forces must remain on the move. There are no fronts in the colonies. The battlefield is where you stand or better, where you find the enemy to stand. In the colonies, anti-air and ground-based weapons allow the colonial Marine to strike from anywhere and in any
