Engineering and Mining Journal ,1886 The Government Machine Jon Agar,2003-09-26 An examination of technology and politics in the evolution of the British government machine In The Government Machine Jon Agar traces the mechanization of government work in the United Kingdom from the nineteenth to the early twenty first century He argues that this transformation has been tied to the rise of expert movements groups whose authority has rested on their expertise The deployment of machines was an attempt to gain control over state action a revolutionary move Agar shows how mechanization followed the popular depiction of government as machine like with British civil servants cast as components of a general purpose government machine indeed he argues that today s general purpose computer is the apotheosis of the civil servant Over the course of two centuries government has become the major repository and user of information the Civil Service itself can be seen as an information processing entity Agar argues that the changing capacities of government have depended on the implementation of new technologies and that the adoption of new technologies has depended on a vision of government and a fundamental model of organization Thus to study the history of technology is to study the state and vice versa

Recent Advances in Molecular Targets for Drug Discovery and Delivery in Tumor Sanjun Shi,Jianxun Ding,Xianjue Chen,Jingxin Mo,Zhi-xiang Yuan,2022-05-05 Understanding Protein Dynamics, Binding and Allostery for Drug Design Guang Hu,Pemra Doruker,Hongchun Li,Ebru Demet Akten,2021-06-08

The Spectator ,1864 Structuration of plant-based milk powder for improved reconstitution Kathrin Kramm,2025-09-30 The importance of plant based milk alternatives has grown rapidly in recent years with powdered forms gaining particular interest in the food industry However these powders often form lumps when reconstituted with water making them unsuitable for consumers and food applications To address this the dissolution process must be optimized through precise particle design and control of powder properties This study focuses on structuring plant based products by forming agglomerates which are influenced during high pressure homogenization spray drying and fluidized bed spray granulation The research investigates how processing conditions and formulation components especially plant proteins and fibers affect emulsion and powder properties to create a viable alternative to cow s milk for industrial use including collaboration with Nestl S A Spray drying produces solid primary particles that encapsulate the oil phase of the emulsion which are then used in the fluidized bed process Detailed product characterization reveals differences in formulations before and after agglomeration An alternative more cost effective manufacturing route for plant based milk powders is also explored A statistical design of experiments is applied to analyze the relationship between process parameters particle structure and reconstitution behavior Results confirm numerical simulations of the agglomeration mechanisms allowing identification of optimal process settings for improved dissolution with fewer lumps Inline and offline analyses further clarify the correlation between particle size structure and solubility Additionally the study examines the reconstitution process in detail considering raw material properties powder composition and solvent effects A modeling approach complements experimental work to better understand the physical processes involved Overall the thesis provides a foundation for applying efficient particle design and optimized manufacturing processes to more complex plant based milk powder systems in the food industry
