

I am analysing a character in a book called 'The Long and the Short and the Tall' his name is Bamforth, private Bamforth in a troop of seven soldiers. The story is about a troop in Japan during the Second World War. I chose Bamforth because his character is strong and different to the other soldiers in the story. I will analyse his personality, how he reacts to others and how the other troops act towards him.

Bamforth is deeply cynical about the war and about the British army. He challenges the authority of the army at every opportunity with cheeky sarcasm. He has learned the rules of the army and uses them against his superiors with quick, witty replies: 'You threatening me, Corp?'. He constantly taunts other men saying of Whittaker, 'This boy couldn't get the home service in the sitting-room' and to Macleish 'you chasing your second stripe already?'.

Bamforth shows a stronger, more humane side to his character in his relationship with the Japanese prisoner. At first he amuses himself by mocking the prisoner and treating him almost like a performing animal. After seeing the prisoner's family photographs, Bamforth warms to him until at the end of the play it is only Bamforth who is willing to defend the prisoner and says 'He's a man'. Whether Bamforth is right or wrong to defend the Japanese soldier with his own life, shows that he is more than just 'the barrack-room lawyer' ... Up to every dodge and skive that's in the book.

The other troops in the play react differently towards Bamforth; Mitchem is the sergeant in charge of the patrol. He has a natural authority, which is first shown when he discovers Macleish and Bamforth about to fight and restores order quickly. He controls Bamforth by using the sort of sarcasm Bamforth uses on everybody else.

Johnstone is the one character we never feel any sympathy towards. Although he is a corporal, he has little or no leadership skills and shows no respect for others. His actions and discipline are ignored by the troops, although Johnstone tries to make himself heard. Johnstone's actions towards Bamforth when Bamforth defends the prisoner show that he likes to take charge but doesn't always get the attention he is looking for. Bamforth likes a challenge and so he is always arguing with Johnstone. Johnstone always reacts so this builds up as hatred between the two soldiers. Johnstone tries to use his power to attack Bamforth
