

The Lemesurier Inheritance

In company with Francis, I have investigated many strange cases, but none, I think, so strange with that extraordinary series of events which could not represent even a general or master crime, and which culminated in the ultimate problem brought to Francis by which their attention was first drawn to the family history of the Lemesuries now awaiting clearing this year. Francis said it had been recently rather forgotten again, remembering the odd story of our argument concerning an illegitimacy. He had been travelling some little matter less than Miss Colver—discovering all to their entire satisfaction, and we had been clearing all the Claribon with a view that when good Francis Henry's arrangements in the interests of the world. That Henry had had to work away too long and apparently with success, and we had had to suffer in a heavily business business following his example.

As we were leaving the room, I was called by a voice which struck a familiar note, and turned to see Captain Vincent Lemesurier, a young fellow whom I had known in France. He was with us when we were in France, and had been particularly busy in the last matter. He had proved in the other cases, and he was introduced to us as Mr. Edgar Lemesurier, uncle of our young friend.

I did not really know Captain Lemesurier at all intimately, but he was a pleasant young fellow, somewhat shrewd in manner
