That name no more belongs to me than the hotel room I was occupying when the call came in. When Caleb Wardell the infamous Chicago Sniper escapes from death row two weeks before his execution the FBI calls on the services of Carter Blake a man with certain specialised talents whose skills lie in finding those who don't want to be found. A man to whom Wardell is no stranger. Along with Elaine Banner an ambitious special agent juggling life as a single mother with her increasingly high flying career Blake must track Wardell down as he cuts a swathe across America apparently killing at random. But Blake and Banner soon find themselves sidelined from the case. And as they try desperately to second guess a man who kills purely for the thrill of it they uncover a hornets nest of lies and corruption. Now Blake must break the rules and go head to head with the FBI if he is to stop Wardell and expose a deadly conspiracy that will rock the country. Freud,2024-05-09 Dostoevsky and the Killing of the Father 1928 is one of Sigmund Freud s most intriguing literary essays in which he applies psychoanalytic theory to the life and work of the Russian novelist Fyodor Dostoevsky Freud delves into the psychological underpinnings of Dostoevsky s creative genius exploring the themes of guilt patricide and redemption that permeate his novels particularly The Brothers Karamazov This essay is a fascinating intersection of literature and psychoanalysis offering a unique lens through which to understand both Dostoevsky s art and Freud s theories Freud begins by examining Dostoevsky s personal life particularly his relationship with his father whose violent death allegedly at the hands of his serfs had a profound impact on the writer Freud interprets this event through the lens of the Oedipus complex suggesting that Dostoevsky s unconscious ambivalence toward his father a mixture of love and hostility played a central role in shaping his psychological and creative life The theme of patricide which recurs throughout Dostoevsky s work is seen as a manifestation of this unresolved conflict Freud also explores Dostoevsky s struggles with epilepsy gambling and moral guilt interpreting these as symptoms of deeper psychological disturbances He argues that Dostoevsky s literary works served as a means of working through his inner turmoil transforming his personal suffering into universal themes of sin punishment and redemption In The Brothers Karamazov for example Freud sees the character of Dmitri Karamazov as a reflection of Dostoevsky s own unconscious desires and conflicts particularly the wish to kill the father and the subsequent guilt that arises from this impulse The essay also touches on Dostoevsky s complex relationship with religion and morality Freud notes that Dostoevsky s characters often grapple with profound existential questions oscillating between faith and doubt sin and salvation This duality Freud suggests mirrors the writer s own internal struggles and his attempts to reconcile his moral ideals with his darker impulses
