

THE HUNT FOR MEDUSA'S HEAD

USE MEDUSA TO TEACH
THEME—JUST DON'T LOOK HER IN THE EYE!

Imagine, if you will, a book of Greek mythology. Are you picturing something with a vase or maybe some Doric columns on the cover? Something just a bit, well, dry? One look at Gary Hanna's fabulously freaky illustration on pages 14-15 will tell you that our adaptation of Perseus and Medusa is not like that! It's accessible and engaging and perfect for introducing students to this famous myth—and it comes with everything you need for a great lesson on theme. And speaking of accessible, engaging materials—be sure to include our spectacular new video “Medusa: My Side of the Story,” as part of your lesson. It just may change your students' minds about Old Snake Hair.

the bad guys get away with their crimes and the good guys suffer? List students' ideas for both categories on the board. Which list is longer? What does this suggest? Ask students if they think the theme applies to real life.

ANALYZING THEME

Can students identify the lady with the really bad hair on pages 14-15? Invite students to share anything they know about Medusa, then review some basic information about Greek myths: They are ancient stories about gods or other supernatural beings. The tales usually explain something about the natural world or the Greeks' practices and beliefs.

Next, ask a volunteer to read the skill-focus box on page 15. Then assign roles and have students read the play.

After reading, distribute and/or project our worksheet, “Thinking About Theme.” Once students have completed the worksheet (individually or as a class), discuss how the play illustrates the theme “Goodness is rewarded and evil is punished.” Who in the play is good? How are they rewarded? Who is evil? How are they punished? Finally, ask students to respond to the writing prompt on page 19.

Extension Activity: Expand your discussion of the theme “Goodness is rewarded and evil is punished” beyond the scope of the play. Can students think of any other myths, short stories, or novels that also have this theme? How about any movies or TV shows? Real-life events? How about examples that do not support this idea—works of fiction or true events in which
