Blue/Black The color blue usually denotes - correct answer The color blue usually denotes hard materials including: metal, hard plastics, alloys wires, batteries, sunglasses, guns, etc. will show on the blue/ black scale.

Green - correct answer Green represents less dense plastics and alloys. The combination of plastic and metal will most likely be some kind of electronic device.

Orange - correct answer The orange represents any biological material. covers natural items and some other materials including: rubber, food, leather, non-plastic explosives, liquids, gels and organic powders (like flour, baking soda, ect These colored items are often important to pay attention to because explosives often partly composed of organic materials like glycerin, potassium nitrate, and TNT. Additionally, drugs such as heroin, cocaine, and cannabis are all classified organic products. That's why identifying biological materials is extremely important.

Red - correct answer Red zone indicates less dense items. This means the machine encountered little to no resistance when scanning the object. This object could be made out of light materials including: fabric, carton, or paper.

The X-Ray test - correct answer On the image interpretation test (also called "baggage scanner training" Object Recognition Test or ORT), you will be shown images of baggage that have gone through the X-Ray machine. You will be given only a few seconds to review the baggage and identify target objects. The target items will be forbidden items such weapons, bottles, shoes, drugs, or electronics. You will need decide whether pass, alarm, or hold a bag due to its content. If you pass the baggage, you decided the bag does not contain any harmful items. you select alarm, you have indicated that the item has a prohibited item and request police intervention. you hold have identified prohibited item which requires intervention by TSO officer and further screening such as: physical search or use of Explosive Trace Technology (ETD).

How Do You Interpret X-Ray Colors? - correct answer X-Ray the image is not so straight forward you can use color detection. The basics to understanding color principles in X-Rays is knowing that color highlights the difference in density of various materials. When item is more dense be bluer. Conversely, less dense, lighter items will be the red
