✓ Exclusively available on IvyPanda

Introduction

Upton Sinclair aims to describe capitalism's evil nature as dehumanizing, brutal, and destructive. The society in the book by Sinclair is similar to the jungle, where humans remind the wild animals who are ready to kill and eat each other to survive. The story is centered around the personality of Jurgis Rudkis, who immigrates to the United States from Lithuania to make his life better. The narration features his attempts to provide for the family and guarantee them a decent level of life, but these actions do not yield positive results. Sinclair states that the capitalistic economic order makes people struggle for survival and lose their morality, which makes it the most destructive thing in the contemporary world.

Discussion of the Novel

The author was inspired by the events from his life, which makes the story realistic. While residing in Chicago's meat-packing neighborhood, Sinclair conducted a study by looking into the employees' factories and homes. Based on his research, he created the fictional book "The Jungle," which tells about the Rudkis family, Lithuanian immigrants who moved into Chicago's Back of the Yards (Sinclair 7). The family arrived in the United States expecting a respectable existence but soon understood this dream was impossible. The main character, Jurgis, takes his beloved woman, her family, and his father to the United States for material well-being. They experience a series of disasters resulting from fraudulent loans, which causes them to become impoverished and force them out of the poor ghetto home they had planned to purchase.

Even moral people with positive motivation are forced by capitalism to become brutal, ruthless, and predatory if they want to live. For instance, when Jurgis comes to the United States for the first time, he tries to succeed as a trustworthy employee at the meat-packing facility. He begins drinking, abandons his remaining family, becomes involved in offenses, and works for the politicians he despises on the meat-packing
