- 1) The following are the major steps in developing a research proposal:
 - a) Selecting a topic: The topic should be interesting, relevant, and feasible. It should also be a topic that you are passionate about and that you have some knowledge about.
 - b) Conducting a literature review: This involves searching for and reading existing research on your topic. This will help you to identify gaps in the literature and to develop your research questions.
 - c) Developing research questions: These are the specific questions that your research will aim to answer. They should be clear, concise, and measurable.
 - d) Designing a research plan: This involves deciding on the methods you will use to collect and analyze data. It also includes identifying the resources you will need and the timeline for your research.
 - e) Writing the proposal: This is the final step, where you put all of the information together into a coherent document. This document will be used to seek funding for your research.

But while it's designed to resemble an iPhone, the 10.1-inch iPad mini is not intended to replace the other two devices in the ecosystem. The tablet is designed to fill the hole that Apple's previous tablets left behind. They were phablets, combining the size of an iPad with the screen size of a smartphone. And that's why they were not successful. When the answer to the tablet dilemma was found, it was not a tablet, but a phone. And now, with the iPad mini, Apple has found a way to make the line and tablet overlap. To maximize the size of the tablet while still fitting the same screen into a phone-size package.
