How States Shape Markets in Latin America Tomás Bril Mascarenhas, 2025-11-17 Why have Latin American countries developed sharply divergent financial systems and how do these systems shape national growth strategies While Chile built large capital markets and Brazil expanded long term credit for firms Argentina lags behind in both What explains this variation This book uncovers the political origins of national financial systems by examining how coalitions of executive branch officials reconfigure markets through two levers the governance of the pension system and the deployment of state owned banks as long term lenders In Chile neoliberal technocrats dismantled the state's capacity as a lender and set up regulation inducing private pension funds to invest in domestic equity and bonds In Brazil a developmental coalition expanded BNDES and activated state owned enterprise pension funds as institutional investors By tracing how political struggles inside the state shape markets the book offers an innovative view of statecraft and marketcraft in Latin America It speaks to scholars of political economy and to policy entrepreneurs working on development across the Global South
