LEARNING AIM B: EXAMINE HOW SOCIOLOGICAL APPROACHES SUPPORT UNDERSTANDING OF MODELS AND CONCEPTS OF HEALTH

P3:	Compare the biomedical model of health with an alternative model of health.
M2:	Analyse how the biomedical and an alternative model of health and concepts of health, ill health and disability affect service provision in a local health and social care setting.
D1:	Evaluate the role of sociological perspectives in the understanding of society and models and concepts of health in relation to service provision in a local health and social care setting.

In this assignment I am going to examine how sociological approaches support understanding of models and concepts of health. I will be comparing how the biomedical model of health differs from the social model of health and whether they have any similarities. I will also be analysing how the biomedical model and the social model of health affect service provision in a local health and social care setting and how it affects concepts of health, ill health and disability. I will also be evaluating the role of several sociological perspectives in understanding society while linking to the concepts of health and the models of health.

P3: Compare the biomedical model of health with an alternative model of health.

I am first going to compare the biomedical model of health with an alternative model of health. The model of health that has dominated Western industrialised societies, certainly since the industrial revolution of the mid-19th century, has been the biomedical model. This is the identification of health as the 'absence of disease', with a focus on diagnosing and curing individuals with particular illnesses and other medical conditions. This outlook of health supports the policies and practice of the National Health Service (NHS). According to this model, health is essentially regarded as being the absence of disease, and the intervention of health professionals is required in times of illness. The main purpose of the health services is to cure disease, and health professionals will utilise scientifically tested approaches to address identified illnesses. The biomedical model fits well with the functionalist perspective introduced and established by Talcott Parsons, in which illness is regarded as, in itself, dysfunctional for society. If people are ill, they cannot make their normal contribution to the smooth running of society. For the functionalist, if people are ill, or adopt the sick role (a term introduced by Talcott Parsons), and are exempt from their normal social responsibilities, they moreover have a duty to cooperate with health professionals and take all rational steps to get better. (Pearsonactivelearn.com, 2019)

It is linked to the medical profession. The model comprises qualified experts diagnosing and treating illnesses. The biomedical model sees health and illness as a social fact that everyone has an equal chance of getting sick. They believe that illness is only treatable using scientific methods such as allopathic cures and only medical professionals. The model encourages users to be service provided and be reliant on the service provider. The biomedical model idea is that qualified healthcare professionals are able to detect and diagnose illnesses and they focus on the cure of the illness rather than avoiding the illness. This encourages a dependency on healthcare and service providers. The
