

How did America become the world's biggest jail? The numbers alone tell a frightening story. The graph below shows the prison population slowly expanding with Richard Nixon's escalation of the War on Drugs, then sharply spiking under Ronald Reagan during the crack crisis of the 1980s, and booming with Bill Clinton's anti-crime legislation in the Nineties, signed in response to public concern over escalating street violence and murder rates. More than 20 years later, with crime rates greatly reduced, America now leads most housing 25 percent of the world's prisoners, topping expensive regimes like China and Russia by wide margins — with people of color and the minority it, being the worst. The worst for whom couldn't be shown.

People of color make up a disproportionate percentage of victims who are involved with their spouses.
