O'Donnell, 2015-10-27 Chapter I THE CASE OF A HAUNTED HOUSE IN RED LION SQUARE I am not a psychometrist at least not to any great extent I cannot pick up a small object say an old ring or coin and straightway tell you its history describing all the people and incidents with which it has been associated Yet occasionally odd things are revealed to me through some strange ornament or piece of furniture The other day I went to see a friend who was staying in a flat near Sloane Square and I was much impressed by a chair that stood on the hearthrug near the fire Now I am not a connoisseur of chairs I cannot always ascribe dates to them I can of course tell whether they are oak or mahogany Chippendale or Sheraton but that is about all It was not however the make or the shape of this chair that attracted me it was the impression I had that something very uncanny was seated on it My friend noticing that I looked at it very intently said I will tell you something very interesting about that chair It came from a haunted house in Red Lion Square I bought it at a sale there and several people who have sat in it since have had very curious experiences I won't tell you them till after you've tried it Sit in it That wouldn't be any good I answered you know I can't psychometrise especially to order May I take it home with me for a few nights My friend smilingly assented The chair was put in a taxi and in less than half an hour was safely lodged in my chambers I was living alone just then for my wife had been suddenly called away to the country to the bedside of an aged and ailing relative I say alone but I had company a lady tabby that apparently abandoned by her lover persisted in showering her attentions upon me For hours at a time she would perch on the writing table in my bedroom whilst I was at work and fix me amorously with her big green eyes Chapter II Chapter III Chapter IV Chapter V Chapter VI Chapter VII Chapter VIII Chapter IX Chapter X Chapter XI Chapter XII Chapter XIII
