

Gentleman of the Jungle

In Kenyatta's The Gentlemen of the Jungle, man renders space in his hut to elephant who seeks shelter from man. Man resorts to violence after elephant and the rest of the animals take advantage of his kindness. "my dear good man, will you please let me put my trunk inside your hut to keep it out of this torrential rain?" asked the elephant, knowing very well that he needed more space than just what his trunk was going to occupy.

Man invited elephant to put his trunk in, once invited, the elephant pushed his whole body into mans hut pushing man out of his hut "as there is not enough room for both of us, you can afford to remain in the rain while I am protecting my delicate skin from the hailstorm" said the elephant. Against the one tone beast man was helpless so he seeks the help of the King of the jungle, who deems the elephant to be just. With no one to turn to for justice, man resorts to violence.

Under the pretence of civilizing Africa, colonial powers entered into Africa and brought tobacco whisky and religion, once in, they took gold silver and spice to nourish their land as did the elephant to protect its delicate skin. Colonial inhabitants like the Elephant were big and powerful. Against their gun powder and muskets, the sharpest African spear is blunt; they were more advanced in weaponry and larger in number since Africa was then divided into many little tribes. There are several reasons why colonizers explored the world.

Although their motive for Africa is made known after the colossal damage they caused in Africa, their facade was the premise of making the world a better place for all to live. The colonizers of Africa needed resources to build the life of luxury they wanted, but they had a problem; they did not have enough resources in their land to live the lifestyle they wanted; hence the exploration. The Colonizers took more than they were offered by the Africans. Elephants are known to appear calm and docile, but can be very violent.

An elephant is unpredictable and can turn on any one at any time, with a high probability of causing colossal damage to their surroundings. According to www. discovery. com, an elephant is "the beast which passes all others in wit and mind." With this knowledge of elephant's capability to outsmart man, one can argue that elephant intentionally asked for man's help with the ulterior motive of taking what is rightfully man's property. The hide of an elephant is very hard and can withstand any burden; hence why the elephant is referred to as a beast of burden.

The scientific name for an elephant is pachyderms, which means thick-skinned animals. Elephant's statement that his "skin is too delicate" is insulting, and condescending to man, considering the fact that an elephant's hide is very rough and rugged; a characteristic that is quite opposite of the delicate skin of man. One can argue that this is an effort by the author to give the reader a glimpse of the attitude of colonizers towards Africans; the attitude of the African being inferior to the colonizers.
