DNA

(1) What information is in a region of nucleic acid that does not code for a protein? (The genetic information in DNA is transmitted by genes. A gene, which is a short sequence of the polymers in a polymer called the nucleic acid, carries the "code" of heredity. Proteins are the building blocks of life and carry out a variety of important functions in the human body.)

(2) What is DNA? DNA is composed of a long chain of repeating, identical units called nucleotides. Each nucleotide consists of a phosphate group, a deoxyribose sugar, and a nitrogenous base. DNA codes for the nucleotides which are the "code" of heredity (it is found in DNA). In DNA, the phosphate group is called the "backbone" and the deoxyribose sugar is called the "sugar-phosphate backbone".

(3) There are three main types of DNA, each with its own unique function.

1. Messenger RNA (mRNA) carries genetic information from DNA to the nucleus for reading to create a strand of protein. The code on the DNA strand (which DNA codes) that a genetic information, is passed to the nucleus and carries the instructions for making proteins in the cytoplasmic ribosomes in the cytoplasm.

2. Transfer RNA (tRNA) also carries the genetic information from DNA to a specific sequence of amino acids, which are the building blocks of proteins. tRNA carries specific amino acids to the DNA ribosomes and transfers it to the polypeptide chain which builds up the protein.

3. Ribosomal RNA (rRNA) is the site of genetic synthesis and is a major component of ribosomes. Ribosomes make proteins and are found in the cytoplasm of a cell. Proteins are synthesized by the ribosomes. The amino acids are carried to the ribosomes by the tRNA.
