

True Story #9 Female Soldiers During the Civil War

During the Civil War, hundreds of women from both sides hid their identities, assuming male identities and appearances so that they might fight for their respective nations. Some of them did it for adventure, but many did it for monetary reasons: the pay for a male soldier was about $13 a month, which was close to double what a woman could make in any profession at the time.

Also, being a man gave someone a lot more freedoms than just being able to wear pants. Remember, this was still more than half a century away from women's suffrage and being a man meant that you could manage your monthly $13 wages independently.

So it should come as no surprise that many of these women kept up their aliases long after the war had ended; some even to the grave. Their presence in soldiers' ranks wasn't the best-kept secret. One woman, Mary Owens, discovered to be a woman after she was wounded in the arm, returned to her Pennsylvania home to a warm reception and press coverage. She had served for eighteen months under the alias, John Evans.

Some females disguised themselves to join the Army to be alongside their husbands such as Sotonia Smith Hunt who left the Army after her husband was shot and died bleeding in the arms.

Perhaps not surprisingly, in 1909 the U.S. Army denied that "any woman was ever enlisted, in the military service of the United States as a member of any organization of the Regular or Volunteer Army at any time during the period of the Civil War."
