 Confidence Intervals (Hypothesis Testing) Questions
 (Mr. James M. Young)

1a. What proportion of the total initial amount of proceeds attributable to the sale is included in your information requests?

Of the $100,000,000 proceeds attributable to the information requests, we want to be sure we have included 90,000,000 or 90.00% of the proceeds attributable to the sale.

1b. What procedures should you apply in the course of an audit to a request for positive confirmation?

In the course of applying for a positive confirmation, we would assess the confirmations and consider setting the controls to encourage them to reply. If the reply rate is good, we would continue alternative procedures that are provided to verify the balances and balances of the accounts. These alternative procedures would include performing subsequent checks on balances of accounts collected from collecting sales after the confirmation date, examination of supporting documents to determine if they are the amounts that support the provided amounts, which includes earned interest on sales and shipping documents as well as reviewing shipping documents and bills of lading (B/L) (B/L and B/L B/L).

1c. What is the purpose of studying subsequent collections?

The purpose of accounts collected from sales is to follow up on all the confirmations that

1d. Based on your analysis of subsequent collections and the results of the confirmation process, are you satisfied that you have sufficient evidence to evaluate the existence and valuation assertions?

I am not satisfied that we have enough evidence to evaluate the existence and valuation assertions. While we did receive confirmations for 25 out of the 30 that were sent out, the 25 represented 80% of the value of the accounts that were to be confirmed. 90,000,000. The 5 confirmations that were not confirmed made up more than half of the value of the accounts to be confirmed (90,000,000). Many of the high balances were made up of receivables by the company, and therefore, we need to review the related invoices and shipping documents to determine if they were properly shipped and the value stated.
