

Women of Troy by Euripides (Don Taylor's version)

Being one of the few texts that was added to the text list this year, Euripides' play Women of Troy is definitely a daunting task for English (& EAL) students to tackle due to the lack of resources and essay prompts available. This is especially significant because the society was pervaded by patriarchal values, where women were subordinated to their male counterparts. Euripides' proto-feminist works were not well received by his peers at the time of writing as women's personal thoughts and pain were not commonly discussed in the Hellenic repertoire.

As a reward for picking her, Aphrodite promised Paris that he would be married to the most beautiful woman in the world, which was Helen – wife of Menelaus, the Spartan prince. Aphrodite had her son Eros (a cupid) enchant Helen and Paris so that they would fall endlessly in love with each other. Helen then escaped from Menelaus' palace to be with Paris, starting the war between Greece and Troy. Menelaus was enraged he convinced his brother Agamemnon to lead an expedition to retrieve Helen. The Greek army was commanded to attack the Trojans. The siege lasted for more than 10 years until the Greeks came up with a strategy to abduct Helen from the palace. The Greek soldiers build a
