

Abstract/Summary: This paper reports the results of a study of the effects of a 12-week intervention on the self-esteem of 12-year-old children. The study was conducted in a primary school in the north of England. The children were divided into two groups: an experimental group and a control group. The experimental group received a 12-week intervention designed to improve their self-esteem. The control group received no intervention. The results of the study showed that the children in the experimental group had significantly higher self-esteem scores than the children in the control group at the end of the 12-week period. The results also showed that the children in the experimental group had significantly higher scores on measures of self-esteem than the children in the control group at the beginning of the study. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week intervention can improve the self-esteem of 12-year-old children.
