The first thing I noticed when I stepped out of the car was the cold air. It felt like a giant hand reaching out to grab me. I shivered as I walked towards the entrance of the building. The door was open, and I saw a group of people standing there. They were all looking at me with curious expressions. I felt a bit awkward, but I tried to smile and wave my hand. One of the men stepped forward and greeted me. He said they had been expecting me. I followed him through a series of corridors, each more ornate than the last. The walls were covered in intricate murals, and the floors were made of polished stone. Finally, we reached a large hall where several other people were waiting. A woman in a red dress approached me and introduced me to the others. They all seemed to be part of some kind of organization or club. I was invited to sit down and have a drink. As I sat there, I began to feel more at ease. The conversation was lively, and everyone seemed to be enjoying themselves. I realized that despite the initial coldness, this place might actually be quite welcoming after all.
