| I | Convex Lens           |  | A transparent piece of glass or plastic that is thinner on the edge; when light passes through it; the lens produces a large, upright image when viewed close up and produces a smaller, inverted image when looked through far away |
| J | Concave Lens          |  | A surface that bulges out, reflects light and produces a smaller, upright and wide image                                                                                                                                      |
| K | Concave Mirror        |  | When a light ray passes from one substance through another substance and changes direction or bends                                                                                                                                  |
| L | Convex Mirror         |  | When two waves cross through each other either canceling each other out or adding together                                                                                                                                           |
| M | Medium                |  | When a wave passes by an edge or through an opening and spreads out                                                                                                                                                                  |
| N | Diffraction Grating   |  | A transparent piece of glass or plastic that is thicker on the edge; produces a small and upright image when light passes through it                                                                                                 |
| O | Converge              |  | When light rays spread out                                                                                                                                                                                                           |
| P | Diverge               |  | When light rays come together                                                                                                                                                                                                        |
