ANATOMY & PHYSIOLOGY

ANATOMY
The eye is a complex organ that allows us to see. It is composed of several parts, including the cornea, iris, lens, and retina. The cornea is the clear, front part of the eye. The iris is the colored part of the eye. The lens is a clear, biconvex structure that focuses light on the retina. The retina is the light-sensitive tissue at the back of the eye that converts light into electrical signals that the brain can interpret.

PHYSIOLOGY
The eye's physiology is the study of how the eye functions. It involves the process of vision, which begins when light enters the eye through the cornea and is focused by the lens onto the retina. The retina then sends signals to the brain, which interprets them as images.

COMMON EYE CONDITIONS

There are many common eye conditions that can affect vision. Some of the most common include cataracts, glaucoma, and macular degeneration. Cataracts are a clouding of the lens that can lead to blurred vision. Glaucoma is a group of eye conditions that damage the optic nerve, which carries visual information from the eye to the brain. Macular degeneration is a condition that affects the macula, the part of the retina responsible for central vision.
