Figure 1

The figure consists of two panels, A and B, showing the results of a regression analysis. Panel A displays the relationship between the dependent variable and the independent variables, while Panel B shows the relationship between the dependent variable and the independent variables, adjusted for the effect of the control variables.

Panel A: The plot shows the relationship between the dependent variable and the independent variables. The x-axis represents the independent variable, and the y-axis represents the dependent variable. The regression line is shown as a solid line, and the confidence interval is shown as a shaded area around the line.

Panel B: The plot shows the relationship between the dependent variable and the independent variables, adjusted for the effect of the control variables. The x-axis represents the independent variable, and the y-axis represents the dependent variable. The regression line is shown as a solid line, and the confidence interval is shown as a shaded area around the line.
