Angle Relationships

There are angles that occur naturally in real-world situations. Angles are measured in degrees, and angles that form a straight line are called adjacent angles. A pair of adjacent angles with a common vertex and a common side but no common interior region is called a linear pair. Vertical angles are two nonadjacent angles formed by two intersecting lines.

Example: Name an angle or angle pair that satisfies each condition.

- two adjacent angles:
at 11:00 and 12:00 two adjacent angles form a linear pair. There are several angles.
- two adjacent angles:
at 1:00 and 2:00 there is a common vertex and a common side but no common interior region. There are adjacent angles.
- complementary angles:
at 3:00 and at 4:00 complementary pairs of angles are complementary.
- two supplementary angles:
at 6:00 and at 9:00 two supplementary angles are supplementary.

Exercise:

Write an angle or angle pair that satisfies each condition.

- two adjacent angles
- two nonadjacent angles
- two supplementary adjacent angles
- two right angles whose sides form a line

Use Theorems 1-1, 1-2, and 1-3 to prove the angles.

- Adjacent complementary angles.
- Adjacent nonadjacent angles.
- Adjacent complementary angles form a line.
- Prove that measures of two complementary angles do not form a linear pair.
